FOSCARINI

Supernova is a newly-born star, but its name also means “very, really, extremely new”. Just like this light whose volume is determined by two-dimensional surfaces. Supernova is a sphere, made up of 7 pairs of discs of different forms, attached in sequence onto a slightly curved suspended metal bar. And the bulb in the middle is like the incandescent nucleus of a planet. It is a full volume that is largely created by the empty spaces between the discs. The discs are made of aluminium, a material which gives this soft volume a high-tech feel and avoids glare, offering a diffused illuminance in all directions.
